The Mandate to Disciple Children

Greetings to you all in the matchless name of our lord and savior Jesus Christ. This month we were celebrating Sunday school Sunday, Unity Sunday and Girl child Sunday. Our children are the Gods greatest gifts for us. Many churches of today have gone a long way off the mark of God's initial plan to disciple children. It's gone so far off that there's hardly any similarity between His plan the process we've employed little wonder we're seeing less disciples walking around. (Deut.6:1-9) seems to indicate, in no uncertain terms, that the responsibility of discipling children lies with parents—parents who have themselves been discipled and are then committed to discipling their children.

When we look at discipling today, it's obvious that we've done two things wrong: Firstly, we've abdicated our responsibility to disciple our children; secondly, we've outsourced this responsibility to others—others, who more often than not, are in no way related to our children, predominantly Sunday School Teachers. Little wonder Christian children of today find it so hard to carry on the faith their parents professed. It is pitiable that the ones with the passion to disciple children are more often than not, 'outsiders,' and not parents.

Parents were called to be the chief discipliners of their children, which would make it easy for the children to follow the lifestyle demonstrated by them. Discipling can't happen at Sunday School or at Camps or Retreats no more than a plant can grow by receiving soil, water and sunlight for one hour a week. But discipling can happen in the home because that's where the child learns (and is supposed to learn) what the Christian faith is all about. In this passage, God gives this mandate to parents alone. Over time, this responsibility has been shifted outside the home. Our kids are being bombarded by so many voices today, that it's becoming hard for them to tell right from wrong any longer. In the ambiguous, fluid environment children live in they need a solid, Christian foundation at home to help them be grounded in their faith.

But here's another phenomenon that's prevalent among some parents today: They'd like to see their children discipled by the church, though they themselves have walked away from the Lord. This is no different from planting an apple seed and expecting a mango sapling to emerge. We can never take our kids where we ourselves haven't first gone. If we were to summarize Deut.6:1-5 in one sentence, it would read something this: "Parents, Please Practice Prior to Preaching."

Yours loving, Princeachen
